ACUE Partners with Bonni Stachowiak and the Teaching in Higher Ed Podcast

Plus, new series offers free weekly content for faculty from instructional experts

October 19, 2017—Today the Association of College and University Educators (ACUE) begins a new collaboration with Bonni Stachowiak and the Teaching in Higher Ed (TiHE) podcast to expand the national conversation around great teaching. The partnership will add to ACUE’s new Expert Dive monthly series, which offers free instructional resources to the faculty Community of Professional Practice.

The TiHE podcast, comprising over 170 episodes, shares pedagogical insights through interviews with leading instructional experts, including ACUE’s own chief academic officer, Penny MacCormack.

“When we discovered how many former TiHE guests had also been featured in ACUE’s Course in Effective Teaching Practices, we knew that our beliefs about great teaching were in alignment,” said Stachowiak. “Since those early conversations, ACUE has introduced me to even more phenomenal educators. I am excited about the ways we will be able to work together to allow for more high-quality learning experiences in higher education.”

This month ACUE will also launch the Expert Dive series, which will feature original content for faculty and faculty developers from our national network of instructional experts, including:

- In-depth blog posts exploring instructional topics
- Follow-up Q&As with expert contributors
- Exclusive video excerpts from ACUE’s course library

The TiHE collaboration will be a critical component of the Expert Dive series, with ACUE teaching experts making regular appearances on Stachowiak’s podcast.
